LESSON VI, SECOND QUARTER, INTER-NATIONAL SERIES, MAY 8.

Text of the Lesson, Lake All, 35-18. Memury Verses, 1, 2-Gelden Text, Lake vii, 117-Commentary Prepared

Popyright, 1901, by American Press A sortation 1 There is a vasi amount of religion or religiousness which is not real. It is merely outward form, like the chaff which has the form of the wheat, but there is nothing within. The scribes and the Pharisees of our Lord's time had an abundance of that kind, and He called them hypocrites, those who play xxIII he so called them's ven times, and in the first verse of our lesson chapter He sald, "Beware ye of the leaven of the tharlsees, which is by poerlsy." Leaven in Scripture is in variably samething evil, corrupt and corrupting. Even in Matt. slit and parallel passages it refers to the currupted food of the church in this presentage called the mystery of the kins doin, the tenching which, accordang to the last juri of our lesson, encourage those who profess to be servants, but scoff at the coming of Christ and nontle with the world

A true child of tool and servant of Christ is heartily "with Him," hears the word of God and keeps It, has a single eye to the glory of thid, lays up treasure in heaven, in all than a sake the Magdori, has no unxlety about to m poral affilies and no fear of death. The man of the world and the hyporthe, on the contrary, are always seek ug more of this world and hving nate them selves. See chapter x1 (23, 25, 24) and the porison of chapter xil up to where our lesson legins. At a table in a far corner of the room u large gentleman in a brown frock coat was quietly eating his breakfast and reading the Herabl. He was of an ornate presence, though entirely neat. A sumptuous expanse of linen exhibited Itself between the lapels of his low ent walstroal, and an Inch of bedlamonded breastplu glittered there like un lee ledge on a snowy mountain side. He had a stemly little eye and a dissipaled from gray mustache. This perouage was Mr. Ephraim Watts, who, following a calling more fushionalde in the eighteenth century than in the latter decades of the nineteenth, bad shaken the dust of Carlow from his feet some three years previously at the strong request of the anthorities. The Herald Ind been particularly historit mon his deportation. In the local phrase, Harkless had "run blin out o' Perhans It was because the Herald's opposition, as the editor had explained at the time, had been "merely moral and Impersonal," and the edltor had confessed to a liking for the improfessional qualities of Mr. Wutts. that there was last a slight embarrassment when the two gentlemen met today. His toreakfast finished, Hurkless went over to the other and extended his hand. Cynthin, the wultress, held. her leenth and clutched the lack of a elmir. However, Mr. Watts made no motion toward lds well known tite pocket. Instemt he rose, thishing slightly, and accepted the hand offered him. The glad to see you, Mr. Wutts,"

There was a faint rustling within the house, the swish of draportes on the stairs, a delicions whispering, when tight feet descend, tapping, to hearts that leat an answer, the telegraphic message: "We come! We come! We are near! We are near!" Lige Willetts stared at Hurkless. He had never thought the latter was good looking until he saw him slep to the door to take Itelen Sherwood's hand and say, hen strange, tow, tense voice, "Wood mornlug," as if he were announcing, at the least; "Every one in the world, except as two, died last night.
